Nuns, haunted houses, sacrifices to stem the flow the ancient evil lurking in the dark recesses of the world. Sounds like a top notch read doesn’t it?I’m a big fan of haunted house stories, and I am deathly scared of Nuns, so on paper this should be a book a book that chilled me to bone. Sadly this was not the case. There is a decent story burried somewhere in this book, a story that would probably be better suited to a novella or a short story. As it stands the story feels protracted and laboured.The authors over reliance of phrases like "shot a glance" quickly get weary, not every look has to be something, sometimes people just look at things. Phrases like "Necks being broken to impossible angles," "and A shudder ran through her spine, and she picked up her pace, not stopping until she reached the library." Just don’t help the narrative flow. If she was really far away from the library and with the neverending picking up of pace that is implied in that sentence, at what time would she reach terminal velocity. As stated above sometimes things just sometimes people just run. A good writer doesn’t have to constantly fall back on poor metaphors and similes.Stilled dialogue that has the Nuns sounding like silly schoolgirls -â œWe could save thousands of lives by sacrificing but a few. Sister Anne and I have studied the texts, and weâ ™re pretty confident we can do itâ | tonight even. We made all the preparations, just in case you changed your mind. The sacrifice required is relatively small comparedâ |â •doesn’t help the story either. I can forgive a lot of this, as English isn’t her native language, but there comes a point when bad writing is just bad writing.

I love a good haunted house story. Shirley Jacksonâ ˆs The Haunting of Hill House remains one of my favorite novels and one of my favorite films (the original, of course). I was thrilled to finally read The Shining recently. Itâ ™s a classic for a reason and one of Kingâ ™s best (and better than the film, in my opinion). And then there are the sillier haunted house films that I love, especially House on Haunted Hill (again, the original).So, I was somewhat excited to receive a free copy of Chantal Noordeloosâ ™ debut novel Angel Manor through LibraryThingâ ˆs Early Reviewer program. Haunted house plus scary nuns? Sounds good to me.And the general plot is decent. Our protagonist Freya inherits a large, old house from her aunt and goes to check it out with her best friends Bam and Oliver. They have plans to turn it into a hotel (itâ ™s that big). But Freya is skeptical. Her aunt was disturbed, living here her whole life, and the house drove Freyaâ ™s mother away, terrified of it. Should they move in and rehab the place?Not if youâ ™ve read the prologue. All kinds of demony business has happened in this house over the years, and now that thereâ ™s fresh blood on the property (literally), itâ ™s ready to do more.With a set-up like that, and a pretty decent beginning, I was really disappointed that the book didnâ ™t follow through. Noordeloosâ ™s writing starts fairly strong, and for the first half of the book, the storyâ ™s compelling, but it lacks a mature voice and suffers what seems to be common with first novels, in that the writing loses its punch as things go along.The storyâ ™s also an odd mix of soap opera and grotesque horror set pieces and it has trouble maintaining a balance between these elements.
